Not liking this game at all, and every minute playing is a snooze. Most glaring issue was the lack of controller support, and I had to use Steam Big Picture to get the simple controls working. The controls use the strange jump-float movements from old Jump Man games, up until the player becomes a bouncing ball with erratic movements.

Anyway, I was not impressed with the rest of the game, either. The graphics are not good at all. There are decent backgrounds, but the platforms are really pixelated, and the character looks like a stickman with a most basic jump animation. I also did not like the timed V puzzle jumping sequences that seemed out of place here in this game setting.

This game really needed an early storyline to keep me interested, and it is really a shame this was given only a token effort. (The protagonist is conveniently a mute.) Over the first hour, there were just a couple very, very limited npc dialogs.

The droning background music loops is actually pretty good, but they do get repetitive after a while. The rest of the sounds are just okay, and sounds like the water splashing is a bit grating.

If you can get this game for a dollar, then sure check it out. Functionally it works and I did not have any crashes on ubuntu 18.10 with radeon drivers. The game has a 500MB install size. Otherwise, I would really check this twice, as I would not call this much of an exploration game any more than any other indie metroid-type platformer. Try Steamworld Dig or Waking Mars, for a similarly priced alternative.
